

Self-Study Modules Available

GPO is releasing 3 modules of a revised Self-Study of a Federal Depository Library, which can be found on the FDLP Desktop under Tutorials. The Self-Study is a tool for your library's voluntary, internal use for educational or strategic planning purposes. The new Self-Study is designed to enable depository coordinators to become more familiar with their depository operations and to determine areas needing improvement or change. Modules being released are: Basics, Collection Development, and Bibliographic Control. An Introduction containing background information, technical information on how to work with PDFs, and more, is also available.

Libraries are encouraged to review their depository operations using the tool. If you have questions or comments about the Self-Study, please use askGPO and use the subcategory of "Conferences/Training".

Suggestions from the community about the Self-Study will be incorporated into the modules after all modules have been made available.
